

Tall Tech Vortex Sticker

Invented by Nick Nelson

Nick has spent decades messing with magnets, finally relating magnetism to what goes on in “Vortexes.”

In the U.S., and at the vortex attraction in Canada, people are introduced to the phenomenon of shrinking and growing. Folks walking around a stationary pole find themselves a different height when arriving back to where they started. In a circular group of fir trees at the Montana Vortex, people's auras become visible... then they learn to feel a tree's magnetic aura by holding their hands close to the bark.

Magnets can capture these “vortex” phenomena, and transfer it to your body. Many people using the Golden Vortex experience a health boost, or relief from pain.

Nick Nelson discovered a method to “clone” his Golden Vortex magnets from natural vortexes like the the genuine roadside attractions that have wowed thousands of wide-eyed tourists.

After decades of study and experimentation, Nick has discovered a method whereby symbols made in magnetic ink can duplicate the illusion of the Vortex. Or perhaps it's not an illusion; maybe it's real! Hence the Tall Tech Vortex Sticker.

Put it on a favorite water bottle, or anything you carry around with you. Feel the energy transferred to the drinking water? Perhaps, stick it on the pipe that brings water into your house, thus energizing your whole house. One fellow wears the sticker as a pendant and puts his hand on the gas hose as he fills his car's tank, and he swears his car gets a ten percent bump in miles per gallon.

Check your eye-level against a fixed mark on a wall without the Vortex Sticker. Then hold or carry the Vortex Sticker and re-check your eye level. Voila! You appear taller. Be inventive, win bar bets, or just revel being little taller than your spouse, or boss. Have fun!
